Moving averages act as a technical indicator to show you how a security's price has moved, on average, over a certain period of time. Moving averages are often used to help highlight trends, spot trend reversals, and provide trade signals. There are several different types of moving averages, but they all create a single smooth line that can help show you which direction a price is moving.

price data is used to form moving averages, they are considered lagging, or trend following, indicators. Moving averages will not predict a change in trend, but rather follow behind the current trend.

Moving Averages - trading success

Moving Averages are price based, lagging (or reactive) indicators that display the average price of a security over a set period of time. A Moving Average is a good way to gauge momentum as well as to confirm trends, and define areas of support and resistance. Essentially, Moving Averages smooth out the “noise” when trying to interpret charts.
